All of these artists have participated in Senior Artists Initiative's Inventory and Oral History Project now in its seventeenth year. The project assists senior artists (over fifty-five years of age) in making an inventory of their life's work and produces interviews with the artists who relate the progression of their careers and how they approach the creative process. Information about the artists, galleries of their art, and oral history interviews can be seen at the Senior Artists Initiative website \(www.seniorartists.org\).

A unique not-for-profit organization, Senior Artists Initiative educates artists in the Philadelphia region about estate issues and the management and preservation of their artistic heritage.
